

Trust and safety

GOALS SESSION 3

- You explain what psychological safety is and why it makes or breaks a culture
- You recognize behavior that builds or breaks trust in your team
- You take a conscious step to share something personal with a teammate

Without trust there is no real culture, only a façade. Teams that dare to show who they are perform better and stay together longer. Today we build that foundation.

EXERCISE 1: TRUST BAROMETER

1 How safe do I feel in our team?

Give an honest score from 1 to 10 for each situation. There is no right or wrong answer.

I dare to admit mistakes in our team: ____/10

I dare to ask for help without feeling weak: ____/10

I dare to say my opinion, even when it differs: ____/10

I feel supported after a bad game: ____/10

What stands out in your scores? Where do you see room to grow?

EXERCISE 2: BUILDING OR BREAKING TRUST

2 What I see happening

Write down two things that build trust in a team. Write down two things that break trust. From your own experience.

BUILDS TRUST

BREAKS TRUST

_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____

Which of your own behaviors could break trust?

EXERCISE 3: DARING TO SHARE

3 Something I never tell

Write down one thing you find hard in sports or in the team. Something you rarely say out loud. You don't have to share this, writing it down is already a step.

Which teammate would you tell this to most easily? Why that person?

What would it bring if you did share it?

ACTION THIS WEEK

What step will you take this week to grow trust in the team?

MENTAL RESILIENCE: REBUILDING TRUST

What do we do as a team when trust breaks because of something a teammate did? Write down what you would say or do.

"Vulnerability is not weakness. It is our greatest measure of courage."

Brené Brown, researcher and author