

COACH PRESENTATION

How do we work?

Short culture track · session 2 of 2

— GOAL OF THIS SESSION

- ✓ Players map how safe they feel in the team
- ✓ Players practice holding each other accountable without damaging the relationship
- ✓ Players choose rituals that keep the culture alive every week

WATCH OUT

- The trust barometer can be sensitive after a hard period. Listen first, ask questions later.
- Do not skip modeling the "I see, I feel, I ask" exercise. Players need to see the format first.
- Keep rituals small. A ritual that feels like a burden disappears within two weeks.

Trust barometer

🕒 10 min · Exercise 1/3

Players anonymously score from 1 to 10 how safe they feel in four concrete situations.
Shift from diagnosis to action: "What needs to change to score one point higher?"

"Give an honest score from 1 to 10. No right or wrong. No one has to show their scores."

The difficult conversation

Model it yourself first. Players then write: I SEE (fact, no judgment), I FEEL (the effect), I ASK YOU TO (one concrete action). This lets them have hard talks without attacking.

"I see ... I feel ... I ask you to ... No names needed on paper."

Rituals and culture promise

🕒 10 min · Exercise 3/3

Players choose three small rituals (before training, after a game, in a hard moment) and write one sentence about their contribution to the culture. Sign. Choose rituals you can keep up for at least eight weeks.

"Three rituals + one sentence: what do you contribute to our culture? Sign."

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

- ? Which trust question felt most dangerous to answer honestly, and why?
- ? Have you ever addressed someone about their behavior? What worked and what did not?
- ? Which ritual would change our team immediately, even if it only takes 30 seconds?
- ? What do you want a new teammate to say about this group in five years?

CLOSING

Introduce the first ritual at the very next practice and name that it comes from the players. Use the "I see, I feel, I ask" model yourself too. Plan a short review after six weeks.
